"Worship and Faith Formation: The Formative Power of Liturgy in Christian Life" brings together ten original essays from the Religions Special Issue of the same title, offering theological, historical, and practical insights into how Christian worship shapes both personal and communal faith. Engaging with Scripture, sacramental practices, liturgical narratives, and contemporary challenges—including pandemics and cultural transitions—this volume offers a fresh exploration of the formative potential of worship. Featuring contributions from international scholars across diverse traditions. This reprint serves as an essential resource for pastors, theologians, liturgists, and educators who seek to understand worship not merely as ritual action, but as a dynamic practice of spiritual formation.
