The questions of how to plan, develop, and utilize limited land resources are common challenges faced by many cities. This Reprint focuses on the theme of urban land development in the process of urbanization, including sustainable urban land development, urban land use/land cover mapping and changes, spatial–temporal evolution, influencing factors of urban land development, urban management and planning, urban expansion and shrinkage, and big data and urban planning. What distinguishes this Reprint is its close integration of theoretical innovation and practical application. We hope that this Reprint will provide useful insights for researchers, policymakers, and students engaged in land development, urban management, and related fields.
