The event comprised the development and delivery of face-to-face seminars by researchers who are members of the CYTED ENVABIO100 Network to the academic community and interested general public. ENVABIO100 is the Ibero-American Network for obtaining biodegradable films of 100% natural origin for the food industry. It comprises universities, laboratories and research centers, as well as industries related to the plastics and food sector. The Network seeks to contribute to solutions that lead to the sustainable development of manufacturing industries and their transition to the use of renewable resources. During the development of the seminars, a synergy of teamwork between researchers from the region, academia and the industrial sector was also sought, through round tables and visits to factories, in order to achieve the objective of the Network.
