

Acknowledgments

I must first express my deepest appreciation for Oliva Andereggen at MDPI for her immense patience, diligence, and guidance. I would also like to thank Laura Wagner at MDPI for her ongoing support. Not only have you both been instrumental in making this project seamlessly come to fruition, but it has also been a pleasure working with you.

I am humbled by the generosity the peer reviewers brought to this project. Their astute and meaningful insights ensure that this project will be a substantive interdisciplinary intervention in the field. It was a pleasure receiving your feedback and input that helped to shape each chapter. Thank you ever so much for your capacity to offer rigorous, creative, and critical feedback to this project.

Finally, I must extend my most heartfelt gratitude to the authors and artists included in this volume, for their brilliance, hard work, and dedication. I have learned so much from each author and deeply value the intellectual exchange that this project represents. I applaud the diverse, intersectional, critical, and creative approaches to the topic of self-representation that the collective works gathered herein bring to the field. Moreover, it has been an honor working with everyone in the process of editing this volume. I look forward to continuing our conversations far into the distant future.

This book is dedicated to Derek Conrad Murray.
