MDPI established Proceedings [1] in 2017 as an open-access outlet dedicated to recording important academic discussions and results communicated at conferences, seminars, workshops or other academic meetings. Proceedings has been very well received, and this prompted us to launch a series of open-access and field-specific conference journals, such as Environmental Sciences Proceedings, Engineering Proceedings, Chemistry Proceedings, and Materials Proceedings [2]. As part of our open-access communication mission and to continue our support, organization and communication of outcomes from conferences, we are proud to announce the launch of the new journal Medical Sciences Forum (ISSN 2673-9992) [3]. We believe this journal will complement our portfolio of proceeding series of journals.

Medical Sciences Forum is a proceedings platform covering the broad field of medical sciences. Communicating critical results from conferences in this field will help advance basic, translation and clinical research among a broader audience. We plan to develop this journal into the go-to platform for researchers and practitioners to discover the very latest research insights and keep in touch with the medical sciences community.

We welcome all those interested in contributing to Medical Sciences Forum to contact the editorial office with their research output proposals. Choosing Medical Sciences Forum as your publishing venue will bring a multitude of benefits, such as open access, a dedicated webpage for your conference, high visibility by assigning a digital object identifier (DOI) to all published items, an attractive cover designed by our in-house team and Sciforum support as well as other additional services and promotional options.

We look forward to working with event organizers and committees on this important project.
